ABSTRACT

The listing describes approximately 50 colleges and universities with programs for learning disabled (LD) students. Descriptions are arranged alphabetically by state and include the college's name, address, telephone number, name of contact person, and brief description. Among services listed are textbooks on cassette; academic, career, and personal counseling; LD specialists; testing and diagnosis; and tutoring. Each description includes information on admission requirements. Another test is provided of colleges or universities that accept students with LD. Parents and professionals are cautioned, however, that the collges/universities have not been inspected by the Association for Children with Learning Disabilities (ACLD). These entries are also arranged alphabetically by state and include information on title, address, and contact person. A list of publications from ACLD concludes the packet. (CL)

There is no specially designated support program for L.D. students. At this time school isn't geared to offer anything but the most minimal services for the learning disabled in the Learning Skills Center. Additional information is available through the school. Visitation by appointment.

Gonzaga University
502 E. Boone
Spokane, WA 99258
Tel.: (509) 328-4220
CP: Alfred L. Morisette, S.J.

L.D. students accepted into program only if disability is minimal and previous special schooling now makes it possible to predict success in college. Information regarding seriousness of the disability and degree of success in overcoming it is required for consideration. Support services are involved only to the extent that certain courses and certain teachers may be assigned during the Freshman Year. Close monitoring of academic progress is also provided. Outside services are used for any testing. Support services for students exhibiting motivation to succeed are available to a very limited extent. Visitation is possible but, due to the fact that the school does not offer a specific program as such, this would be very non-productive.

Central Washington University
